The purpose of this study was to evaluate the thermal properties and the micro-tensile bond strength (microTBS) to dentin of 2 urethane dimethacrylate (UDMA) resins after simulated in vivo degradation due to 2 months and 10 months of water storage. An isotherm was constructed to determine the glass transition temperature (Tg) and the effect of biodegradation on the thermal properties and microTBS of each resin to dentin, and the correlation between both parameters were analyzed. The biodegradation decreased the Tg of both resins, while the Tg of the unbiodegraded resin (UDMA/MMA) remained constant. The biodegradation reduced the microTBS of both resin systems, and the correlation between Tg and microTBS was significant for both resins ($r = 0.875$, P This is an archived article and the information in the article may be outdated. This is kind of a strange question. That's the expected output: I have a list of JSON files that looks like this: { "product": "DVD", "disk": "4.5GB", "key": "FZ9YS.KJ4J.SU2,M,Q2", "serial": "S34D66" } Now I have this variable which I think should be a dictionary: serials: { "S34D66": true, "FZ9YS.KJ4J.SU2,M,Q2": true } But I don't think that the way I'm iterating through the files is correct: for dat in serials: with open(dat, "r") as r: for line in r.readlines(): current_data = json.loads(line) serial_id = line.split(",")[0].strip() current_server_data.update({ "product": current_data.get("product", ""), "disk": current_data.get("disk", ""), "key": current_data.get("key", ""), "serial": serial_id }) I get: product: DVD disk: 4.5GB key: FZ9YS.KJ4J.SU2,M,Q2 serial: What am I doing wrong? A: You're probably looking for something like: serial

= {} with open(dat, "r") as r: for line in r.readlines(): serial_id = line.strip().split(",")[0]
    current_server_data[serial_id]
