6 or Windows Server 2019, 10, or 1809 are supported. Docker Desktop now has a Microsoft/Windows user experience. See what's new in Docker Desktop. This article describes some new changes to Docker for Windows that you will need to be aware of as a Docker for Windows user. Two new commands have been added: docker info and docker history. docker info displays detailed information about a running container. You can use this command to learn about different aspects of a container including the image that it runs, the network configuration for containers, limits on resources like memory or CPU, the list of running tasks, and more. docker history displays information about a running container's history. You can use this command to determine how long a container has been running and when it was first created. docker container prune removes all containers in a running Kubernetes cluster that have been idle for a specified amount of time, then deletes the containers' data. This command is now more powerful with the introduction of the prune timeout. You can now uninstall Docker from a running Docker Container on Linux. This feature can be used to quickly remove applications that are no longer needed. Once you run docker container prune, the container can run as normal and new containers can be instantiated, without the need to run docker container rm. After upgrading, you no longer need to explicitly specify the volume location of your data in a Docker container. It is now the default location of data in the container. Docker does not store data for containers to the host system by default. Data is stored in the standard Linux location for a container. If you are using volumes to store data in a container, you can now omit the --volumes-from parameter when you start the container. You can now use the -e and --env parameters to pass values into a running container at any time. Windows Server 2019, Docker for Windows, and Windows Server containers now support the built-in Docker Windows Registry and Debugger. Containers no longer need to store their data on the host system. Instead, Docker stores data inside of a container registry. This makes it easier for you to update, delete, or troubleshoot containers. You also have the option of using a debugging agent to inspect the Docker images being used in the Windows containers. More information about these new features can be found in the Docker documentation, which you can access from anywhere in the world at Rocket virtual Machine-IMX8L

After a long time I checked the site for the last time. To my surprise it is more popular than when I last checked. I guess there is lot of people that are interested in Cherry, especially the average Joe. You guys will be welcomed, and I look forward to new posts. I have been spending the last couple of weeks working on a really cool proof of concept. I wanted to get the best of both worlds. I wanted a game that I could play quickly but with a long form that I could revisit whenever I wanted. Play a couple of rounds of a quick game, have a long multi-player game and play a single-player campaign. It has had a really long journey to completion, but it is finally finished. It is currently in the Beta stage of development and once it is released I will put it on Google Play. Recently, I have been getting some feedback regarding the game and the release of it. I would like to announce that I am taking this seriously and I want to address the concerns that have been raised. Below I have listed the following changes: o Most importantly I have added five Multiplayer modes. I have also added in a number of other changes. First and foremost the test program has been updated so we can test the fixes to the multiplayer game. Second when the game is first launched we will offer the chance to play the game in "Multiplier" mode. A few people have asked if this will change to "local" automatically. The reason for doing this is that you can play against anyone no matter what mode they are in. This should help to prevent the issue that when the game is first launched, the other players are on local. o The game will now be very difficult to score a win in. You can only score one point in the single-player mode and that is if you score a perfect game. In the multiplayer mode you will be awarded at best 12 points. At worst you will be awarded 2 points. The unlock codes will be emailed so that you can play through all the modes. o The game is now fully localized. The in-game chat is now fully localized. The credits are now fully localized. All the voice overs have been fully localized. As you can see above the game is now fully localized. o There is now a timer in the game when it is first started. After 15 minutes if you don't log into the game your progress will be saved and it will between.Fabio Boce, chief executive of Canal+ Group, has said that he expects the pay TV market to bounce back. At a Digital TV World news briefing to unveil 'The Discovery Channel', Canal+ Group also announced a 3-year extension for the Miss World contest. Boce didn't mince his words. "In the last 12 months, we lost almost 10% of our subscribers. I think it's going to recover very quickly," he said, adding that while the news of the extension of the Miss World contest will bring a smile to the competition's audience, he feels it is the right time to extend the contract. "After Cannes, we looked at the figures and we saw that there was a strong interest by international broadcasters to buy Miss World." Boce noted that Discovery's channel, TLC, paid $80 million to produce and market the show. Boce said that he expects other companies to join the battle with talent shows for the next one and a half years. Advertisement Advertisement In regards to new services offered by cable operators, Boce said that providers of video-on-demand services will continue to open, saying that while those services use hard discs, cable TV operators will continue to use the same technological platforms and content delivery networks as before. This will allow more content to be delivered to cable subscribers than before. Boce cited a study that found that cable operators are prepared to spend more than $5.3 billion to operate, lease and build such a network by 2008.

Satellite TV also has an edge over
