What's New in the?

Today's post is about a project that my Santa had me hang out with. I got the gift a few days ago and was pleasantly surprised, especially when I learned that he had used the one piece of unfinished jewelry I posted in a recent post. I've never posted that I have some jewelry/beading/beaker making experience. I actually have a year of college under my belt, with a couple of different jewelry design classes. I wasn't, however, the person to create the jewelry pieces from the photos I had submitted. I was one of many students who worked on the project in a group setting and learned the art of bead stringing and jewelry making from that experience. I received a gift from my Santa, right from what he described as "turning his old string pipe into a necklace…". I don't smoke, so I didn't think much of it at first. As I twisted, twisted, and twisted some of the pipe into a necklace, I started to get a feel for what Santa had in mind. The construction of the pipe reminded me of a piece of jewelry in my possession. My second one piece piece was found on a type of mountain that can make anyone want to scream – it is very firm, and gets rained on all summer long. It's very difficult to hold onto, and you have to pull it out of a hole in the rock. The rock I found it in had to be sliced out of it with a rock saw, and I worked hard to feel the beads of rock hold onto my piece. It's likely the only time I've ever felt that level of satisfaction when I worked a project. Without any idea as to what was going to happen with this gift, it's quite an honor and privilege to be able to offer you all a glimpse into what it is like to hand-make something. I'm excited to add it to my list of "things I've made". Huge thanks to my Santa for the gift. Not only does he have a gift for creating awesome things, he also seems to have a gift for friendship. Thanks Santa.package org.apache.maven.surefire.junit; /* * Licensed to the Apache Software Foundation (ASF) under one * or more contributor license agreements. See the NOTICE file * distributed
