This invention relates to a method of preparing a nonwoven fabric using large-diameter monofilament and a synthetic fiber bundle containing the same. A nonwoven fabric using large-diameter monofilament and a synthetic fiber bundle containing the same is prepared by slitting a bundle of conventional synthetic fibers, heating the bundle to obtain a plasticized bundle, while passing it through a fixed or moving drum or roller provided with cavities corresponding to the diameter of the monofilament, and wrapping the bundle around the drum at such a rate that the monofilament is transversely bonded with the bundle of synthetic fibers. In the preparation of nonwoven fabric using such synthetic fibers, such cavities are provided on a drum, and the bundle of synthetic fibers is wrapped around the drum at such a rate that the monofilament corresponding to the cavities is transversely bonded with the bundle of synthetic fibers. When a bundle of synthetic fibers is wrapped around the drum at a high wrapping speed, it is automatically heated to a plasticized state. Therefore, the heating time can be shortened and the heat transmission efficiency becomes high. However, when a bundle of synthetic fibers is wrapped around a drum at a low wrapping speed, it is not heated to a plasticized state, and transverse bonding is difficult to obtain. That is, since the wrapping speed is too low, the bundle of synthetic fibers is not heated sufficiently, and the monofilament is hardly transversely bonded with the bundle. The object of the present invention is to provide a method of preparing a nonwoven fabric having the above advantages, that is, a nonwoven fabric in which the monofilament is transversely bonded with the synthetic fiber bundle, and to provide a synthetic fiber bundle suitable for use in such a method.
