A novel pyrido[2,3-d]pyrimidine scaffold is introduced for the design of HIV-1 protease inhibitors, and a series of analogues containing different heteroaryl or tert-butyloxy substituents were synthesized via a short synthetic route with an overall yield of 24-30%. These compounds were found to be potent HIV-1 protease inhibitors, exerting the most potent activity of any nonnucleoside protease inhibitor reported to date.Flood and Evacuation Map - Water Level Changes The estimated floods map indicates the base flood elevation of the respective area.
