What's New In?

1. Technical Field The present invention relates to an optical encoding apparatus and an image forming apparatus. 2. Related Art Image encoding apparatuses are known that encode image information (hereinafter, referred to as target image information) included in a target image and convert the target image information into information that can be read by a certain type of sensor. In addition, as shown in FIG. 12, there are known image encoding apparatuses in which a plurality of detecting sensors 1001 to 1004 are fixed to a sensor detecting area 1002 provided in parallel on a conveyance path and are covered by a cover 1005, respectively. Furthermore, another image encoding apparatus is also known that reads target image information using the plurality of detecting sensors 1001 to 1004, corresponding to imaging positions of the respective detecting sensors 1001 to 1004, respectively. For example, in the apparatus shown in FIG. 12, the respective detecting sensors 1001 to 1004 respectively receive light from a light source 1006 in the form of parallel rays, via an objective lens 1007 corresponding to each detecting sensor. In addition, when the respective detecting sensors 1001 to 1004 are in a reading state, a focusing lens 1008 corresponding to each detecting sensor is used to read target image information of the plurality of target images, that is, the respective detecting sensors 1001 to 1004. As described above, in the apparatus shown in FIG. 12, a plurality of detecting sensors can be fixed to a certain area of the conveyance path, in parallel with each other, and the cover is provided to be able to cover all detecting sensors, thereby improving the efficiency of target image information detection. However, in this configuration, the cover may be moved due to external impact and impact of conveyance. This can result in a problem in that the detecting sensors may move and hence the respective detecting sensors may not be disposed at the same imaging position in a reading state. As a result, the apparatus may not be able to read the target image information at intended imaging positions, which may lead to reduction in the quality of encoded data.Q: Google Apps Script, Inputting text into a form field using a function I am using "dataGadget.html" and want to display the input text fields in "result".
