As you can see, Group Speed Dial for Firefox is built on the concept of Speed Dial, a feature that is present in most of the popular browsers for Internet Explorer, Google Chrome and Mozilla Firefox. This application is basically an extension that allows you to replace the native Speed Dial window that displays your browsing history with a totally customized interface. Lets you create custom Speed Dial tiles While Speed Dial for Firefox is installed and started you will be asked to select a default speed dial. On a Mac you would click once to load the Speed Dial, and click again to change it. On a Windows PC you would double-click to load the Speed Dial, and right-click to change it. You can now choose the default speed dial you want to use. For example, you can choose Internet Explorer's speed dial, and create other speed dials for Firefox and Google Chrome. Once you've selected a Speed Dial, you will have a preview window so that you can change your mind at any time. Search for a specific speed dial in your bookmarks - you can search for "Internet Explorer Speed Dial" or "Firefox Speed Dial" and the application will show all their entries for you. Make a note of the entries you want to save for later, and click "Save Dial" to save them to the current Speed Dial you have selected. To remove a dial, simply go to the dial that you want to remove, and click "Remove Dial". Now you will be able to enjoy an enhanced Speed Dial without the usual browser limitations. You'll be able to use it to locate your favorites, see your history of visits and appointments, change your language and specify your preference on whether you want to see the Speed Dial while you're in the browser or if you want to open the Speed Dial later. The good thing about using the built-in Speed Dial is that you can export it to a zip file so that you can share it with your colleagues if you want to. Of course, this feature is available with Group Speed Dial for Firefox, but you can also import the zip to it.
